01 THE PROPOSITION

Why this matters

Every patient interaction shapes the reputation of a hospital. From the first telephone call and the registration counter through treatment coordination, billing and discharge, patients and their families expect clarity, compassion, professionalism and confidence.

Across a full episode of care the treating consultant is present for only some of the patient's time in the building. The rest belongs to front office, patient relations, billing, nursing and clinical support, housekeeping and security, who hold the experience together at moments the clinician never sees. Clinical excellence can be concentrated in specialists; the experience of being cared for cannot, because it is assembled touchpoint by touchpoint. That consistency is a capability, and it is trainable.

What the programme builds: awareness and self-efficacy · personality and image · emotional intelligence and empathy enhancement · quality, service excellence and proactive service · service recovery, conflict resolution, incident reporting and crisis management · interdepartmental coordination and communication · resilience, self-motivation and stress management · brand awareness · forecasted thinking about daily operations.

- Professional presence early: the patient judges before a word is spoken.
- Difficult situations late, resilience after: de-escalation needs listening and regulation already in place.
- Supervisors after their teams: staff returning to untrained supervisors regress.

04 OUTCOMES BY ROLE

What each group takes away

- Front office and reception: first-impression protocol, telephone discipline, waiting-time communication
- Patient relations: empathy-led enquiry, complaint intake, service recovery, closing the loop
- Billing and administration: explaining estimates without jargon, financial conversations, dispute de-escalation
- Nursing and clinical support: bedside courtesy, dignity and privacy, handovers, compassion fatigue
- Housekeeping and facility: conduct in patient areas, permission before entering, discretion, escalation
- Security: firm but courteous authority, visitor control, de-escalating grief and agitation
- Supervisors and department heads: huddles, on-floor observation and coaching, feedback, underperformance
- Managers and leadership: reading the dashboard, linking complaints to capability gaps, governing the calendar

05 APPROACH AND DELIVERY

How it runs, and what the hospital receives

- DIAGNOSE: Management discussions, departmental inputs, employee observation, and review of anonymised feedback and complaints.
- DESIGN: Every module customised against the hospital's own policies, SOPs and service standards. Induction is built here.
- DELIVER: Facilitated four-hour sessions: concept, demonstration, practice and feedback, three days a week.
- REINFORCE: Job aids carried to the point of work, supervisor coaching, and short observation visits during live shifts.
- MEASURE: Assessment before and after, on-the-job observation, and monthly reporting to management.

All training is built on the narrative of real experience and real incidents: hospital-based case studies, incident reports, patient-interaction simulations, role plays, scenario discussions and coaching, with assessment before and after. Of each four-hour session, 105 minutes are structured practice and a further 25 minutes participant case work.

- Training Needs Analysis report by end of Week 2, competency and skill-gap framework in Week 3, and a training calendar the hospital can extend quarterly
- The induction programme and all twelve customised modules, with facilitator guides, participant materials and role-specific job aids
- Assessment and observation instruments in use from Week 1, consolidated in Week 3
- Attendance records, feedback analysis, monthly training reports, and corrective plans where a standard is not holding
- Management review presentations and a training effectiveness dashboard

Effectiveness is reported at four levels: participation and reaction; knowledge gain through assessment before and after; behavioural change through on-the-job observation against the checklists supervisors use; and organisational indicators, which depend on hospital-held complaint and feedback data and are therefore reported as movement rather than guaranteed.

06 WHAT WE NEED, AND IN CLOSING

Developing people who care for people

- A single point of contact from HR or L&D, and confirmed batch nominations ahead of each module block
- Participants released for the full four hours, and a training room with projection for up to 30
- Access to anonymised patient-feedback and complaint themes for case studies, and permission for on-the-job observation
- Nominated subject-matter experts for clinical, statutory and policy content, plus the hospital's own SOPs and service standards

Invoices are raised monthly in arrears. GST as applicable. The calendar is confirmed jointly before commencement, and sessions missed for hospital reasons are rescheduled within the engagement window where possible. Hospital data is treated as confidential.
